The human condition on show

Bangkok-based American artist Nicole Kircher will exhibit her latest series of paintings titled "Cognitive Dissonance" at Nelson Hays Library's Garden Gallery before it goes on display at the Art and Cultural Studies Laboratory in Yerevan, Armenia.

Nicole is interested in conveying emotional transparency, empathy and hope. The exhibition deals with the human condition where one tries to maintain conflicting beliefs, desires and values in the space of one soul and the ensuing feelings of guilt and discomfort. The paintings are figure-based and sometimes incorporate other forms of symbolism as a narrative technique.

Nicole works as a painter and photographer and has exhibited primarily in the US.

She has won several grants and fellowships to attend residencies in the US and Bolivia.

She has also worked as an art educator in public and private institutions and for non-profit arts organisations including The Centre for Photography at Woodstock in New York.

Cognitive Dissonance is on show at Nelson Hays Library's Garden Gallery from today until Sept 2. The library is located on Surawong Road and the gallery opens daily from 9.30am to 6pm. Call 02-233-1731.
